

A Warrior for the Innocent: Why Jill Jones Soderman is the Advocate Every Family Court Victim Needs

Jill Jones Soderman is one of the only true experts in her field who has dedicated her life to defending the innocent and vulnerable. Her commitment to justice is unwavering, and her willingness to stand up for those who are defenseless in family court is unmatched. In a system designed to silence dissent and protect corruption, Jill stands as a beacon of hope.

Her fight is personal. After losing her beloved husband, Jill experienced firsthand the retaliation that comes with speaking out against systemic injustice. When an act of arson took her home—and with it, every memory she had built with her husband—she could have succumbed to despair. Instead, she rose from the ashes, more determined than ever to push back against the criminals who hide behind robes and court procedure. These are the same individuals who allow the innocent and vulnerable to be abused and tortured for political leverage and, ultimately, money.

As a victim myself, I spent nearly two years battling the tyrants and mercenaries who had robbed me of my assets, my children, and nearly my will to keep fighting. Despite being Harvard-educated, holding several post-doctorate degrees, and having a successful career in marketing at one of the largest companies in my industry, nothing could have prepared me for the nightmare that awaited me in family court.

My case became a story of national interest. Major newspapers and media personalities eagerly pursued it—until they realized the truth behind the corruption at play. One by one, they backed away, unwilling to “poke the bear.” Even the Bar Association issued warnings to stay silent. Lawyer after lawyer cautioned me against stirring the waters, and I struggled to understand why. It soon became clear: attorneys who challenge the Bar or expose judicial corruption are terrified of the consequences. The same fear permeates every profession tied to family court—legal aid, forensic experts, and even child advocates.

Then, I stumbled upon Jill Jones Soderman and her incredible team of warriors for justice. At first, I underestimated her. She didn't fit the mold of the powerful legal figures I had encountered. But I quickly realized how wrong I was. She may be small in stature, but she is a force of nature—brilliant, fearless, and relentless.

The Shakespearean line, “Though she be but little, she is fierce,” has never been more fitting.

Jill’s résumé is staggering. Her accomplishments span decades, and the number of lives she has saved from the horrors of the system is nothing short of remarkable. By all logic, she should not have been able to take on and defeat the judicial giants she has faced—but she does, time and time again. She is a hero in the world of family court victims, unafraid of anyone or anything. As the saying goes, “The only thing we have to fear is fear itself.” Jill has none.

I only wish I had found her sooner. She is not just an advocate; she is a fighter, a friend, and a warrior. Unlike those who profit off the suffering of families, Jill prioritizes love over money. Many of her victories will never be publicly known because revealing them would put the innocent in danger. There are countless families who have been rescued from the abuse and corruption of family court, their horrors unimaginable to the average person—but they are safe today because of Jill.

Her work is done in the shadows, but the impact is undeniable. If you or someone you love is facing the nightmare of family court, I urge you to reach out to Jill Jones Soderman and her foundation. It may be the most important decision you ever make.

Visit the Foundation for Child Victims of the Family Courts \(FCVFC\)

Testimonial by investigative reporter and family court advocate: Nikki Isaac